

Primer on the Rheumatic Diseases, Edition 11

This Primer is recognized as concise, authoritative, and timely summary of what physicians and students need to know about rheumatic diseases. The Foundation hopes that this Primer will inspire students to undertake the care of people with rheumatic diseases and will enable physicians in all fields and in all countries to better understand and manage patients with rheumatic diseases, thus fulfilling the mission of the Arthritis Foundation to better the lives of people with arthritis. The effort to improve the quality of life for people with arthritis involves many activities both for patients and people who care for them. Through 150 service points and by means of cooperative agreements with other agencies, the Arthritis Foundation provides programs and services for people with arthritis to help improve the quality of their lives. These programs include exercise classes and videotapes, advocacy programs, self-help courses, and support groups. Educational material including books, pamphlets, brochures, videotapes, and audiotapes are also available to people with arthritis and their families. Most importantly the Arthritis Foundation seeks to increase the awareness of arthritis as a serious health problem and to dispel the belief that little can be done to help people with arthritis or related diseases. The Foundations purpose is to support research to find the cure for and prevention of arthritis and to improve the quality of life for those affected with arthritis. Supporting research remains the primary goal in 1997 it spent approximately $17 million to fund the work of postdoctoral fellow, new investigators, biomedical and clinical researchers, and health and science researchers.
